KINDER MORGAN PRESIDENT SAYS PIPELINE SUPPORTERS DROWNED OUT

'The opposition gets a louder voice at the mic,' says Ian Anderson

Kinder Morgan says it's building significant support for its Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project despite opposition from outspoken critics such as Vancouver Mayor Gregor Robertson. Since July, a federal panel has been gathering feedback from First Nations, non-governmental organizations and citizens along the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline route. This week, the panel stopped in Vancouver where Mayor Robertson told the panel his reasons for strongly opposing the project. Robertson said the increase in tanker traffic associated with the pipeline is not worth the risk of a major oil spill. But Ian Anderson, the president of Kinder Morgan Canada, told Stephen Quinn on CBC's The Early Edition that he and Robertson have different philosophical views. "Certainly, he has a right to his own opinion ... but ultimately it's only one set of facts that are relevant," Anderson said. "We're trying to get those out." The National Energy Board approved the proposal in May, with 157 conditions. Right now, a federal ministerial panel is conducting more public consultation on the project. During NEB hearings on the expansion, Anderson said he thought Vancouver's evidence was not credible. "I was involved in that process every day for almost two years ... I read the recommendations of the board in detail. It (the NEB) considered the evidence of the city of Vancouver, and in part, considered it to be not credible [and] not helpful in their decision." Anderson said he thought the NEB process was fair. "It wasn't some contrived process that was done in any less than vigorous fashion. It was a thorough process and all of the evidence was considered ... I don't think people should be left with the impression that it was anything less than that." Looking ahead, there are a number of legal challenges to the NEB's approval of the pipeline expansion — from the city of Vancouver, First Nations and environmental groups. But

Anderson said there is more support than people realize for the project, pointing out the number of agreements the company signed with various communities and nearly 40 First Nations along the pipeline route. "Clearly, the opposition gets a louder voice at the mic, and likely more headlines. But they've heard from a tremendous number of supporters as well." Anderson argued that the company wasn't "buying support" and did not expect explicit support from communities in return for signing agreements. "We're not looking for support letters from them. What we're looking to do is have them work with us to understand how the project will affect their community and what kind of impact and disruption we might cause as we construct through their community. [We want] to give something back in recognition of that." The panel wraps up its meetings next week in Victoria. It will then produce a report for the federal government, who is expected to make a final decision in December.

Seven Generations Closes Acquisition of Montney Nest Assets That Significantly Expand High-Growth Kakwa River Project. Lenders increase 7G's credit facility from $850 million to $1.1 billion. Seven Generations Energy Ltd. (TSX:VII) has closed its acquisition of Montney liquids-rich natural gas assets in northwest Alberta from Paramount Resources Ltd. "This acquisition significantly expands our Kakwa River Project, increasing our proved reserves by about 47 percent and our inventory of high-growth Nest acreage by about 35 percent. At a similar development stage to our original Kakwa lands, these high-quality Montney lands are well delineated. New processing plants and transportation facilities are built with capacity to expand production. Marketing arrangements are in place. We now have more than half a million net Montney acres covering early-life resources that we believe are poised to deliver the strong rate of low-supply-cost growth that will help us reach cash flow sustainability and generate value creation over the long term," said Chris Law, 7G's Chief Financial Officer.

Development planning and amalgamation work underway "We are expanding our development planning to incorporate the added lands covering the prolific Nest reservoir - our highest quality Montney asset. We plan to apply our successful and innovative drilling, completions and production practices to continue operational optimization across our newly expanded Kakwa River Project," said Glen Nevokshonoff, 7G's Senior Vice President, Operations. With the acquisition complete, 7G's 2016 production guidance is now 120,000 to 125,000 barrels of oil equivalent per day and capital investment is planned at $1.05 billion to $1.1 billion. 7G plans to outline its 2017 outlook and development plan in the fourth quarter of 2016. Consolidated Montney Nest resource lands can underpin market integration initiatives "These expanded, low-supply-cost Montney resources strengthen our capacity to increase sales into traditional markets and diversify into new markets. As our long-term transportation capacity on Alliance and TransCanada pipelines increases incrementally towards more than 840 million cubic feet per day in 2018, we have substantial room to grow production, largely to the U.S. Midwest. Beyond that, we have the resource base to underpin new infrastructure developments for our suite of five products: natural gas, condensate, propane, butane and ethane. Our core focus remains on continually advancing innovation to produce liquids-rich natural gas at the toe of the supply cost boot. With one of North America's lowest supply costs, we are very well situated to evaluate midstream opportunities that serve new customers through the potential development of initiatives such as natural gas-fired electricity plants, liquefied natural gas export facilities, natural gas-to-liquids refining and petrochemicals," said Marty Proctor, 7G's President & Chief Operating Officer.

Reserve-based credit facility increases about 30 percent to $1.1 billion

Concurrent with the closing of this acquisition, 7G's lenders increased the company's existing reserve-based credit facility by about 30 percent, from $850 million to $1.1 billion. This credit facility, which matures in May 2019, is provided by a syndicate of 12 financial institutions. With this credit facility increase, 7G has available funding, not including projected cash flow, of about $1.7 billion as of June 30, 2016 after the completion of the acquisition. On July 26, 2016, 7G closed its previously announced bought-deal equity financing raising gross proceeds of $747,666,750 by issuing 30,705,000 subscription receipts at a price of $24.35 each. The proceeds of this financing have now been released from escrow and were used, in part, to fund the Montney asset acquisition, and the balance of the net proceeds are expected to be used to fund the company's ongoing capital investment program and for general corporate purposes. Now that the Montney asset acquisition has closed, each subscription receipt has been exchanged for one common share of 7G. Holders of the subscription receipts are not required to take any action in order to receive the 7G common shares. The company has been advised by the TSX that the subscription receipts will be delisted by the TSX after the close of trading on August 18, 2016. Seven Generations funded the Montney asset acquisition with a combination of $475 million in cash (before customary closing
